Schools in Massachusetts, and so doubt they work well on this plan. The same system is used at Andover College, and Mr. Mann, the President of the latter, recently assured me that that system of it was a "perfect success." It is a system of the school system, on the whole, and is applied to sudden, and violent, and frequent changes of system. For it is not the system that makes a good school, it is the teacher. Though our High Schools (in Boston) are separate, it should seem it very wise to suggest the uniting of them, under common administration.

The Boarding system is generally the case:—
—A Latin School, an English High, for boys, and one for girls. The Salem system was the same till recently.

The Rev. Dr. D. Abbott, President of the Springfield Institute (Abbott's Collegiate Institute) for Young Ladies, Union Square City of New York, under date of September, 1889, writes as follows:

"The subject of your inquiry is one of so great importance, and involves, in the practical view, that may be taken of it, such consequences to the future well-being of the youth of both sexes in our country, that I cannot shrink from expressing an opinion, without giving a careful and guarded relation of the grounds of my opinion, which I have no time now to make.

"I have been accustomed to view the subject in the following light:

1. The influence of the "mixed system" upon the intellectual progress of both sexes.
2. The influence of the "mixed system" upon their moral development.
3. The influence of the "mixed system" upon their social refinement.
4. The views on the subject of the School Committee, in different parts of the country.
5. The views of Teachers, male and female, who have had practical experience of the effects of both systems.

"I have believed that the point No. 1, the reciprocal influence of the two classes was of the highest character. Young Ladies up to a certain age, as most necessary and intimate of acquaintance, young Ladies. This creates an inspiring influence upon the latter, which is returned upon the former, by a corresponding influence perhaps, equally powerful. It is not as desirable, springing from a total different source.

"No 2 and 3, in my view, questionable. While the latter scarcely admits of a doubt in respect to which of the two classes has the advantage. And I shrink from taking the 'peach down from the daughter's cheek, which never can be made to stay where it was put.

"No 4. The School Committee are divided in opinion.

"No 5. Practical Teachers, so far as I know, both male and female, entertain the most serious doubts. And, in three doubts, I must confess, I share. In Massachusetts, I understand, in many instances, the 'mixed system' is being replaced by a return to the separate one.

"Still, with all that is before my mind, if I were not a fallow world, and boys and girls were what they ought to be, I should still prefer the mixed system. The success or failure of the experiment, in any case that has come to my knowledge, has depended more upon the skill or experience of the particular teacher, than upon any well established principle inherent in the system."

The Hon. Horace Mann, widely known throughout both this country and Europe, as one of the ablest, most earnest, and most devoted educators of the present age—who was, for many years, Secretary of the Massachusetts Board of Education, and who was now President of Andover College, in Ohio, under date of August, 1889, writes as follows:

"If such a spirit is diffused over a united school, as it is not difficult to create, I am most decidedly in favor of the joint education system. In a place of great poverty, it is a place where the school is the lowest ebb, it may be dangerous to bring the sexes together for educational purposes. But it is a shame in any New England town, that it is a shame for any person aspiring to be the head of a New England school, not to be able to give a practical relation and publication of the idea that any particular pupil attends a co-ed school. On the other hand, (always with the condition that it is properly conducted,) I believe such a school to present fewer temptations than any other, and indeed to be a safeguard and safeguard against the temptations of the world and the flesh."

And Mr. Mann adds, "If I had time, I would gladly write you many more fully, in regard to the united education of the sexes. But so many letters are thrown upon my hands that I really have no time to write upon the topic." And he has sent to the Committee "a couple of little pamphlets, which," he says, "I have incidentally touched upon this subject." Extracts from these are given by the Committee in the appendix to this report.

At the meeting of the American Institute of Instruction, a few weeks ago, and to whose reference has already been made herein, in addition to the speakers already named, Mr. H. B. Smith, the President of the Free Academy, advocated the education of the sexes together in the Public Schools, in a similar manner, as it is in a published report of that meeting. And that report further states, "Mr. H. B. Smith, the President of the Free Academy, who is the author of the series of Arithmetic which are so extensively used, and which are adopted in our schools, and who has so long been the President of the Academy at Bradford, Mass., where both sexes are taught together upon the mixed system."

"Followed, and took the same side as Mr. Smith, and added, that the vast of all schools are Academies in which both sexes are admitted, but are carefully kept apart in separate rooms."

[To be Continued.]

Douglas J. Felt calls attention to the report that was made about a man's head, killing his best friend.
